investor should know. It's pretty clear the author talked several of his investment friends into writing a chapter, compiled them together and creates "insight" into investing. A few chapters are about investing, others are not really. I understand how behavioral finance is important, but there wasn't a lot of "how to". As far as most of the advice goes, it's nothing too earth shattering and most chapters can be summarized in a few words. Take a loss and don't worry about it, have risk controls, compounding works, "special" information is important. Plus several non-investment chapters. There are many other actual investment books worth purchasing. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Anthology that at best introduced me to important contemporary financial thinkers. By Greeny. When Mauldin comes up with a new book, I always get it as I did with this one when it first came out. The book introduced me to great macro thinkers such as Ed Easterling, Rob Arnott and Gary Shilling. It's funny that those guys are all saying the same thing now as they did five years ago, and for the most part they're still correct. In this book, the vision of luminaries cited is constrained by brevity. The idea of getting "just one thing" out of famous people seems sound yet is difficult in practice. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. How to Get Rich Quickly? By Jusuf Hariman. In this book, John Mauldin offers an incomparable shortcut to prosperity: the personal guidance of an outstanding group of recognized financial experts, each offering the single most useful piece of advice garnered through years of investing. John Mauldin asked each contributor to share the single most useful insight gleaned from long years of experience: "just one thing". In this book you will learn: (1). How to boost returns with "the 2% alpha solution"?; (2). The risk-return fallacy; (3). Why you should use "volatility throttling" when assembling your portfolio; (4). The secret of "investing in the fog"; (5). Why "the winner's rule" really works; (6). Why the best performing funds have the highest percentage of realized losses; (7). How psychology often trumps economics; and (8). The strength of a non-consensus investment theme. Study and apply this book and you will get rich quickly.
